
Dustin J. Gard-Weiss

Deputy Director for Intelligence Analysis, Collection, and Operations (N2/N6I)

Mr. Gard-Weiss is currently the Deputy Director for Intelligence Analysis, Collection, and Operations. In this position, he supports the Deputy Chief of Naval Operations for Information Dominance / Director of Naval Intelligence (OPNAV N2/N6) in delivering comprehensive intelligence to Navy leadership, overseeing intelligence activities within the Navy, and representing the Navy within the Intelligence Community (IC).

Since joining the Office of Naval Intelligence (ONI) in 1999 to manage Navy's foreign intelligence relationships, Mr. Gard-Weiss has served in an array of leadership positions at ONI, OPNAV, and at the Defense Intelligence Agency (DIA).

Prior to his current position, from 2010 to 2012 Mr. Gard-Weiss led the office responsible for delivering strategic and current intelligence to the Secretary of the Navy, Chief of Naval Operations, and their staffs. From 2008 to 2010, he was assigned on Joint Duty to DIA's Joint Intelligence Task Force – Combating Terrorism as the Deputy Counter Terrorism (CT) Mission Manager. At DIA, he established a new organization to lead the Department of Defense's CT Intelligence Enterprise and served as its primary representative to the National Counterterrorism Center and broader IC on the full range of CT analytic, collection, policy, resource, planning, and information sharing topics.

Mr. Gard-Weiss joined OPNAV in 2003 as a senior strategy and policy advisor to the Director of Naval Intelligence, responsible for strategic planning and communication, and representing the Navy on IC strategy and policy boards. In 2006, he was asked to create a new Program Analysis and Evaluation office to measure the performance and return on investment of Navy's $5 Billion in intelligence resources. And, in 2007, Dustin was handpicked to serve as Executive Assistant to the Deputy Director of Naval Intelligence.

Mr. Gard-Weiss earned a master's of business administration from Northwestern University's Kellogg Graduate School of Management and a bachelor's of arts in international relations from Brown University.
